U.S. Senate Candidate Daniel Lewis Thinks the Bailout was a Bad Idea

Nashville, Tennessee, October 6, 2008 – Daniel Lewis, the Libertarian Party of Tennessee’s candidate for United States Senate thins that the recent $700 billion dollar bailout package was just simply a bad idea. The bailout is only a temporary fix to a permeate problem. Economics is a science that follows certain economic laws. The bailout will just put off the inevitable from happening. Those who are about ready to default on their mortgages should take personal responsibility and scale back their spending and relocate to housing they can afford. Perhaps many of them need to become renters until the economy improves.

Congress had no Constitutional authority to authorize this bailout. However Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution authorizes congress to regulate the value of America’s median of exchange. Congress should enact sound monetary policy and inflation proof our currency by returning to a currency based on the value of gold and silver. This would do far more to stabilize the economy. The bailout will only cause inflation, especially if the funds are obtained by simply printing the money, causing a general devaluation of our money supply.
